Survivor Bill Ingram has been one busy guy. On Saturday, September 28th he spoke at the Maritime Heritage Center at the Landing in Jacksonville. The presentation was hosted by Paul Ghiotto, Curator of the Museum. Michael Rothfeld, President of FVPPI spoke about why Bill was chosen for the POW documentary, “Stolen Freedom” and Robert Mitchell of Rolling Thunder FL Chapter 4 introduced Bill and led the discussion. Bill spoke about his incredible story of survival during his 3½ years of captivity by the Japanese in Burma. Everyone in the audience was amazed by Bill’s heroic story. Next, at the 2013 University of Florida vs University of Georgia football game, Bill was introduced to all 80,000 fans in the stadium. The game was televised on national TV. Finally, he appeared at Jacksonville’s Museum of Science and History (MOSH) where he spoke and answered questions.
Salvaging of HMAS Perth

By Pattie Wright

In early September 2013, NG Jerry Ranger posted on the USS Houston (CA-30) Facebook site a report by a diver friend, which described recent salvage activities on HMAS Perth. The diver (who does not want his name to be mentioned—editor), wrote:

“We were out this weekend doing the 6 monthly Perth and Houston dives and are sad to confirm what Tech Asia told us the other week about the Perth. The mid-section above deck were the bridge was has been completely removed, the bow guns have been damaged by what appears to be explosives with the barrels missing and the tops peeled of, the bow has collapsed completely. Although it is hard to be certain, but as the metal that was the superstructure is all missing and is not lying around as debris it looks although we could be wrong like purposeful attempt to salvage the steel. Mike is already in contact with the Australian Embassy in Jakarta who are looking to see if the wreck is actually protected as a war grave and if anything can be done. I dived her in May... and she was all there so it must have happened in the last four months. [Two other divers] dared the Houston this morning, we had breakfast but it seems to be untouched. It appears to be trend with WW2 wrecks in SE Asia.”

The Royal Australian Navy was informed and the Chief of the Navy, VADM Ray Griggs asked for an immediate report for briefing of the relevant government minister. He is an outstanding man and has been reported to have moved very quickly on the news.

The HMAS Perth Association, family and friends were informed of the situation at the end of October. It was also discovered that Australia does not have the wherefores to claim her in the sense of protecting her as a war grave. She, of course, lies within Indonesian waters. In fact, the [Australian] Department of Environment and Heritage doesn’t even classify naval war graves as such; their designation is, rather, ‘maritime military grave’. Not quite the same kudos. And no matter what name Perth is given now, she is in peril.

The sticking point for our government agencies is that the UNESCO 2009 Convention for the protection of Historic wrecks was not signed by either Australia or Indonesia. This lack of ratification seems to allow HMAS Perth to slip between the gaps of Australian government protection. The curiosity here is that a Japanese mini submarine was discovered sometime back...near 2007 and we have protected her. She lies just off Sydney Harbour. One would think that this quid pro quo situation would apply to our ships in foreign waters.

Rather a lot of heaven and earth has been moved to garner support to have something done about preventing further salvaging. To have it stopped. Sadly, whatever is happening is being done diplomatically, behind doors, as Australia and Indonesia are, at present, in a contretemps with accusations of spying and issues of asylum seekers. Potentially, HMAS Perth could be lost in the wash.

There seems little doubt that salvagers are out and about in the waters off SE Asia. A Dutch submarine, HrMS 016, has been completely lost to a salvage barge (Photo on the right). This salvaging is put at 21st October 2013 off the Malaysian island of Tioman—just off the east coast near Mersing. She too was a war grave. The Dutch navy has been informed of this desecration. The HMS Prince of Wales and HMS Repulse have also been got at.
There is no evidence about who is doing it. And I have no real evidence of who is managing our side of things, either.

The RAN has asked me not to go to the press as their recently placed initiatives could be foiled. I had to agree.

I have recently emailed Val Poss and she has told me how badly Houston has been pillaged, and how similarly the US government reacted to Val’s entities to have the salvaging stopped.

Mother Nature will surely have their way with these two heroic ships.....but should a barge load of money-hungry bastards have their way with them first?? Remember, I am Australian!!

A RAN dive party is being gathered together to dive on Perth in March 2014. This will be the first archaeological dive to have been made on her. I will try to get a film crew together to accompany this party to document the event. Who knows? Both ships may survive if we keep up the pressure, but in all honestly I doubt it.

The lethargy of men. The softly spoken comment of ‘I hope this doesn’t happen on my watch’ has already been heard. In truth, it is shameful.

The Mailbag

Notes on news received via email at contact@usshouston.org and via regular mail...

- Received an email AWF1 Bryce Ricklefs, USN, who wrote: “I am stationed at Pearl Harbor-Hickam as part of Executive Transport Detachment Pacific, a small squadron that flies the 4-star Commander, US Pacific Fleet on our Gulfstream V aircraft. We run in conjunction with the local Naval Operational Support Command (NOSC) for CPO 365. CPO 365 is a year-round training that trains PO1s to become CPOs in separate phases. As part of that training, we chose to organize ourselves into a "ship," to pay homage to and learn about the detailed history of a particular ship in Naval history. I personally conducted research into what ship I wanted that to be and chose the USS Houston. We will adopt the Houston as our ship for the entirety of our training this year. We are having a ship's logbook created, and I am reading Ship of Ghosts by James Hornfischer right now. I found your website, and I thrilled to see you are still a very active organization. I would like to know if there is any way we can work with you. Do you have materials you can send us? Also, are there are surviving members or family members that live in Hawaii that we can contact? Any input, help, or guidance you can give us would be greatly appreciated. I sincerely thank you for your time and look forward to hearing from you.” I responded with suggestions for further reading; an invitation to attend our Association’s 2014 reunion; and provided a copy of the Power Point Show, Survivors of Sunda Strait.

- Received via email from Susan Guilford the sad news of the passing on 13 September 2013 in Santa Fe, NM of Jean Rentz Lansing, 94, who was the younger daughter of USS Houston’s chaplain, CMDR Rentz. I emailed a letter of condolence on behalf of our Association to Susan.

- 11/4/13: Received an email from an Australian, David Hipworth, regarding his great uncle Thomas Frederick Smith TX8413, who “is a survivor of the Japanese POW Camps at Batavia, Changi, Moulmein, Kilo Camps and the River Kwai,” David wrote. “If I am lucky and he continues in good health then I would like to bring him to America in 2014 for the next reunion of your excellent Association.” David attached some articles on Fred and an itinerary for a trip in early January 2014 to the River Kwai which David and Fred are planning. “If any of your Members and their Families would like to join us then they would be most welcomely received,” David wrote. “Fred is still very sprite and gets around playing golf (9 holes with cart) twice per week. While Fred was in the Bicycle Camp on Batavia and in the Burma Camps he worked alongside survivors of the HMAS Perth, USS Houston and the 131st Texas National Guard [Branch 5—Dana.] The article in the Australian publication of the POW’s Barbed Wire and Bamboo mentioned this year’s ANZAC Day march in Melbourne and the fact that the USS Houston’s banner was proudly marching alongside that of the HMAS Perth, triggered me into looking up and Googling your Association, hence my correspondence to you today. I am taking my first trip to the USA with my Wife Gina in November, 2013 and we are driving from the West to East Coasts with a stopover in Houston to visit the USS Houston Memorial in Sam Houston park to lay some poppies for Uncle Fred in memory of his friends and mates and also the library of the Houston University. I wish your Association more years of continued success.”
Crew Member Spotlight
Walter K. Schneck

By Joe McCain

Walt Schneck was my father-in-law’s good friend. They first met in San Diego in 1940 (Fleet Music School) and maintained their friendship throughout the war and afterwards. Both eventually became members of the USS Houston’s band.

Walt was originally from Waterloo, Iowa. He enlisted in the US Navy in 1936. In the autumn of 1940 he was assigned to the Asiatic Fleet where he served aboard the flagship, USS Augusta, as a musician. On November 20, 1940, the flag was transferred to the USS Houston. The entire ship’s band, including the bandmaster, was transferred at the same time.

Walt went aboard the Houston as Mus2C but he soon was playing “first trumpet” in the band. The Houston’s band was highly regarded and often performed in such prestigious locations as the Army/Navy Club and the Manila Polo Club.

On the night the Houston was lost in Sunda Strait, Walt’s battle station was that of a loader for the port side “pom-pom” gun. When the order to abandon ship was given, Walt jumped over the side and managed to land in the middle of an empty life raft. As the life raft drifted alongside of the ship, men anxious to get out of the water were helped aboard by Walt. When they got closer to the stern of the ship, Walt decided things were too crowded so he left and started swimming. Shortly thereafter, the raft received a direct shell hit from the Japanese. There were no survivors and a small piece of shrapnel hit Walt in the hip.
Walt and a small group of other survivors drifted away to the north of the Japanese landing area. They got ashore on Java after two days and three nights of battling treacherous ocean currents. He remembered being wrinkled and oil-covered from his prolonged exposure to the sea. A rice paddy bath soon helped. He and his companions joined a small group of HMAS Perth survivors and managed to locate shelter for the night. The next morning a small child brought them some food and tea.

On their fourth day ashore, they made contact with a seemingly friendly native who offered to take the men to Tjilatjap where they thought it might be possible to escape back to Allied territory. However, after six days of making their way through the Javanese jungle, they found themselves exhausted and without food, so they lay down to sleep. When Walt and his friends awoke, they found themselves surrounded by Japanese soldiers. Their native guide had betrayed them.

The enemy soldiers first took them by truck to Serang but found it was too overcrowded for any additional prisoners. They were sent to the city jail at Pandeglang, instead. From there the men were taken to the Kempe-Tai Prison in Batavia where they were interrogated before going on to Bicycle Camp.

While at Bicycle Camp, the prisoners were paid tens cents a day for working (in Japanese “invasion money”) and allowed to buy tobacco, sugar, canned milk and a few other items from a Japanese-run version of a PX. After leaving Bicycle Camp, the men were sent to Changi Camp in Singapore for a few months.

In January 1943, Walt and other prisoners left Singapore by train and were then put aboard a Japanese ship with an eventual destination of Moulmein, Burma. From Moulmein, Walt’s group started south and he began forced labor on the Japanese “death railway” through the jungles of Burma and Siam (Thailand). The food shortages and living conditions became increasingly primitive as the railway progressed south. Walt developed tropical ulcers from scratches on his right hand. Three surgeries in camp followed - absolutely necessary to prevent further spread of infection – but the use of his hand was basically lost. 100 Kilo Camp was in a very swampy area and one of the worst on the railway. After reaching this camp, Walt’s weight dropped to around 85 pounds.

Unable to perform manual labor on the railway because of his hand, Walt eventually was sent to Kamburi in Thailand. From there, he went to Nakhom Pathom Dispensary where he worked as a cook for the patients there. He was at the dispensary when the war ended. Upon liberation, Walt was flown to Calcutta for hospitalization and recuperation.

Returning to the United States, Walt managed to buy a 1941 Chevrolet and enjoy some traveling. He also continued to serve his country by making speeches for the War Bond Drive.

After leaving the Navy, he owned and operated a restaurant in Corpus Christi, Texas.

Walt told several interviewers after the war that he thought the Japanese could never understand the Americans’ cheerful attitude. No matter how rough things were, the Americans always came back to camp, after a dawn-to-dusk workday, singing and confident that someday other Americans would be coming to liberate them. Walt passed away in November 1976.

In a letter written recently to Trudy Schwarz, Diane Bancroft, daughter of HMAS Perth survivor Arthur Bancroft, reported on her experiences at the 2013 International Fleet Review. Diane wrote: “On the weekend of 5 October, Colin, his wife Cheryl, John and I went to Sydney for the International Fleet Review to celebrate 100 years of the Australian Navy. There were 20 Australian naval ships and 20 international naval ships, together with the tall ships, gathered in Sydney Harbor for the weekend. We went on board a ferry to view the proceedings. It was truly amazing.

After the ships sailed through the harbor we were invited on board HMAS Perth-III for a personalized tour of the ship. Then, the following night we were invited to a cocktail party on board. It was truly amazing and a bit emotional because it brought back lots of memories of Mum and Dad and how much they enjoyed the reunions they went to, and how proud Dad was to be a part of the HMAS Perth tradition.
